

Assistant Professor in Public Law

Neapolis University Pafos announces one academic position at the rank of Assistant Professor in Public Law

The Law Department offers graduate and postgraduate programs that provide up-to-date knowledge in every area of law, including Public Law and its particular branches with an emphasis on General and Special Administrative Law, Administrative Judicial Procedures and Tax Law.

In order to support our undergraduate and postgraduate teaching programs and to further strengthen our research activities in the aforementioned fields, we are now seeking to recruit an Assistant Professor in Greek Public Law.

Candidates should hold a PhD in Public Law and have at least 3 years of university teaching experience. They should also have important research experience as well as a strong record of publications in the area of Public Law. The ability to teach Greek Administrative Law and Administrative Law in a European and comparative perspective, as well as previous research and/or publications in these fields, shall be particularly appreciated.

The successful candidate will play a substantial role in developing the subject area and he/she will be expected to provide substantial academic and research skills.

An internationally competitive remuneration package is offered according to qualifications and experience.
